

New Jersey's "Do Not Call" rule is under attack because it is more stringent than the federal legislation and telemarketers are lobbying for their rights. As a single person with a home-based business, NJ's "Do Not Call List" enables me to get my work accomplished more effectively. When I first created my home office, it was almost impossible to get business calls because telemarketers called constantly. In November 2004 I signed up for "Do Not Call." In February 2005, I hardly ever receive a telemarketing call, and my phone is now available for fax, email, Internet and business calls. That is why I pay my phone service and tax dollars. I do not pay to have my phone line tied up by solicitors. Please do not interfere with New Jersey's right to prevent these calls. I pay FCC and other federal taxes on my phone bill. I would like to maintain my current services and rights for this payment. Thank you for listening to my comments.
